

Classroom Management: Could Your Mental Set Need a Reset?

Good classroom management techniques are essential to foster a positive learning experience. Every year we find teachers that have been pushed and pulled all year long. Eventually, a teacher lashes out in a way that then puts the teacher in a bad position of not maybe having made the best decision. This leads to the teacher spending sleepless nights full of worry until the situation is resolved. This session will review research-based classroom management techniques that will reinforce all of the great things you are already doing while reminding you of things you haven't recently implemented. It will also allow for dialogue with colleagues from the Region to talk about things that practically work and how to keep yourself centered when the year starts to be trying.
